Background

Conversion “therapy” laws prohibit state-licensed mental health practitioners from subjecting LGBTQ minors to conversion “therapy” – a set of harmful, dangerous, and discredited practices that attempt to change a person’s sexual orientation or gender identity. These laws do not restrict the practice among religious clergy or other non-state-licensed individuals.

Wisconsin

- (0.75) State partially bans conversion “therapy” for minors
- See Executive Order No. 122 (June 2021), prohibiting the use of state funds for conversion “therapy” for minors
- Formerly, (1) state fully banned conversion “therapy” for minors via regulations. See CR 19-166 (effective Dec 2020 – Jan 2021, and again Dec 2022 to Jan 2023). As reported here and here, the regulations were approved by the governor in February 2020 and went into effect in December 2020, before being blocked by a legislative committee in January 2021. The committee’s tactics kept the ban blocked through the end of the 2021-2022 legislative session. In December 2022, the ban was briefly reinstated, but in January 2023, the legislature again blocked the ban for the rest of the 2023-24 legislative session.
  - The governor filed a lawsuit (Oct 2023) against these blocks, arguing the actions constituted an unconstitutional “legislative veto” that infringed on the power of the executive branch. The case is currently before the Wisconsin Supreme Court.
